Demonstrations in Practical Agriculture. n this exercise the class is taken to the field or stable and given instruction in performing the simplest fundamental operations in the daily work of the farm. For example, the student is taught the proper method of currying a horse, how to take apart and put together a harness, and harness and unharness a single horse or a pair, to drive and to handle a team under a variety of conditions. He is taught how to milk and how to handle the various farm tools. Soils, Composition and Classification. Preceding study of methods of cultivation, the student should know how soils are formed, of what they are composed, the relation of different kinds of soil to water, heat and air; the effect of varying proportions of humus, clay or sand, and the reasons why soils of different compositions have different characteristics; The mechanical, physical and chemical effects of water, showing the results from too much or too little moisture; The capacity of soils to hold water and plant food; The chemical and mechanical composition and their relations to crop production. Soils. After study of the composition of soils follows a consideration of the plow, harrow, cultivator and other implements used in the preparation of the soil for planting and in the planting and cultivation of the crop. As the school has a very good outfit of implements, the student is able to become familiar with them by actual experience, first learning by classroom exercises the use and adaptability of the tools,...
